Andrej Babiš
Prime Minister

Dear President, dear António,

I fully share the concerns raised by Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni in her letter of 5 November and thank you for placing this important issue on the agenda of the informal European Council in Dublin.

Ongoing diplomatic efforts to end the war in Ukraine call for serious engagement by the European Union. We should not start from the assumption that peace is impossible but rather focus on what can be done to achieve it. Europe has a fundamental interest in a just and lasting peace that respects Ukraine's sovereignty and safeguards European security.

Any future settlement between Russia and Ukraine will have far-reaching implications for the security architecture of our entire continent. At the same time, Ukraine's financing needs are enormous, and the EU is expected to shoulder a substantial share. Such financial responsibility must be matched by meaningful political influence.

Ukraine needs a predictable and sustainable support. We have to make sure that our support remains effective and firmly anchored in a credible strategy for ending the war.

At the same time, agreement on future financing for Ukraine cannot be made a precondition for adopting the next Multiannual Financial Framework. The Union must retain its ability to define and finance its own long-term policies and priorities, regardless of how the situation evolves.

I therefore strongly support the call for the European Council to agree on a clear and strong political mandate, ensuring that the EU is meaningfully represented in the negotiations and able to influence their outcome. Europe must be a political actor in bringing this conflict to an end, not merely a financial contributor to managing its consequences.

Yours sincerely,

Andrej Babiš
