

Terms And Conditions

Article 1: Purpose

1. The French Republic's liberty, equality, fraternity human rights prize, endowed by the Prime Minister of the French Government, is awarded annually by the Commission nationale consultative des droits de l'Homme (National Consultative Commission of Human Rights). It is conferred in Paris, or as appropriate in the prize winner's home country, on 10 December each year on the occasion of the Human Rights Day proclaimed by the United Nations.
2. The prize distinguishes field work and projects connected with the practical defence and furtherance of human rights, in the spirit of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.
3. Eligibility for the prize extends to work or projects of an individual or collective nature without distinction of nationality or frontier, with the exception of members of the National Consultative Commission of Human Rights.
4. Each year, the prize is associated with one or two themes concerning the defence and furtherance of human rights. Applications must bear a relation to the, or one of the, said themes.

Article 2: Award

1. The prize is awarded to the candidates, up to the number of five, ranked first by the jury.
2. A "special mention", designed to encourage applications of particular merit, is accorded to the five candidates ranked next by the jury.

Article 3: Prize Money

The prize money for attribution is determined as a block total amount by the Prime Minister. The jury is free to divide this sum among the prize winners, as designated under Article 2.1, according to the dossiers submitted and the candidates' financial estimates.

Article 4: Application Procedure

1. Each year, the National Consultative Commission of Human Rights issues a call for applications, stating the theme or themes for the year and notifying the closing date for applications, beyond which applications cannot be accepted.
2. Applications, with supporting documents, should be addressed to the Secretary-General of the Commission. They must contain a detailed description of the work or project, a budget estimate and presentation of the authoring party. Applications must be written in French.

Article 5: Jury

1. The prize is attributed by a jury empanelled each year by the President of the National Consultative Commission of Human Rights and consisting of at least fifteen full members of the Commission, all with voting rights. The jury is chaired by the Commission President. The jury is empowered by delegation accorded by the Plenary Assembly of the National Consultative Commission of Human Rights .

2. The jury takes decisions by majority vote. No more than one proxy vote is allowed. For decisions to be valid, at least two-thirds of the jury must be present or represented.

3. The jury proposes the theme or themes of the year to the Plenary Assembly of the Commission, sets the timetable of events, time-limits and meetings, nominates rapporteurs from among its members, examines applications and casts its votes.

4. The secretaryship of the jury is exercised by the Secretary-General of the National Consultative Commission of Human Rights.

Article 6: Obligations of Recipients

1. In the thirteenth month following the award of the prize, each recipient must obligatorily submit to the Secretary-General of the Commission a report on the performance of the work or project and the use to which the funds received have been put.

2. The French Government and the National Consultative Commission of Human Rights decline all responsibility for the opinions and actions of recipients. The latter must not let it be thought that they speak or act on behalf or with the authority of the French Government or the Commission.

3. In the case of a confirmed breach of conduct, or where a recipient fails to respect his obligations, the jury may forbid him to claim title to the prize.

4. Recipients of the sums paid undertake in advance to return to the French State all or part of the amount awarded in the event that they do not carry out their work or project, or that they fail in the obligations stipulated under these terms and conditions.

5. Candidates are required, when entering their applications, to be cognizant of these terms and conditions.
